TRUSTEE COMMENTS

Morris stated that the vote to remove LaRue's name off the library happened while he was in Europe. Morris finds the act reprehensible.

Wood – A public body must remember that a named building is an honor but also a burden when the named individual is still living. The named individual retains a tacit representative of the institution and his or her actions can be considered reflective of the institution and its values. The removal of LaRue's name leaves him free to live his life and take whatever private and public actions he likes without concern for their impact on the library.

Beckwith thanked the public for coming and speaking tonight.
